Excerpt: . . . Manpower and Reserve Affairs provides force management policy for both the active and reserve components. It is then the responsibility of each National Guard and Reserve Command - the Chief, Army Reserve, the Director of the Army National Guard, the Chief of the Navy Reserve (Commander of Navy Reserve Forces and Commander of Marine Corps Reserve Forces), Chief of the Air Force Reserve, and the Director of the Air National Guard - that the policies for medical and physical fitness examinations are properly implemented for their respective commands. Each National Guard and Reserve unit commander is responsible for ensuring that the members under his or her command are provided routine medical and physical examinations in a timely manner, and for identifying and processing members who are not medically qualified or physically fit for active duty. The reserve component member is responsible for meeting scheduled medical examination requirements, obtaining any recommended follow-up medical and dental care from his or her personal (civilian) medical provider, and truthfully reporting any changes in his or her medical or dental condition to military unit commanders and military medical personnel. Upon mobilization, responsibility for the medical and physical fitness of the reserve component members transfers to the active duty counterparts. Several studies identified medical issues with the reserve component Problems Identified with members called to duty for Operations Desert Storm and Desert Shield. A Medical Deployability 13 1991 Army Inspector General report estimated that as many as 8, 000 during Operations Desert reserve component personnel were found to be medically nondeployable Shield and Desert Storm upon arrival at mobilization stations....
